

Freddie Flintoff hits the Bullseye for ITV

Published Fri 04 Oct 2024

British game show Bullseye is back on ITV, with cricketing legend Freddie Flintoff at the presenting helm.

Bullseye is one of the UK's most successful and best loved family game shows and in this brand new Christmas special each playing team will be made up of an amateur dart player, known as the 'thrower', and their team partner, the 'knower'. They will combine their skills, throwing darts at different game boards, whilst answering questions correctly for 'points and prizes'.

The 1 x 60' programme for ITV was commissioned by Katie Rawcliffe, Director of Entertainment & Daytime Commissioning ITV and Joe Mace, Entertainment Commissioning Editor ITV. It will be Executive Produced by Paul McGettigan, Head of Entertainment, 12 Yard Productions.

Freddie Flintoff said: "I love the darts and Bullseye was one of my favourite shows as a kid. Can't quite believe I'll get to host this Christmas special. You can't beat a bit of Bully!"

Katie Rawcliffe, Director of Entertainment & Daytime Commissioning ITV said: "Bullseye is back and we can't wait to welcome Freddie Flintoff back to ITV too.

It's a real treat to have both as key parts of our Christmas schedule on ITV1 and ITVX this year."

Michael Mannes, Managing Director, 12 Yard Productions said: "We are delighted to have acquired the rights to Bullseye, one of the most iconic game shows ever. And the timing could not be better considering the popularity of darts. Freddie is the perfect host for it and we can't wait for the show to be back on ITV."
